

Migration

(Carrying over items from one place to another because they haven't been done or still need to be addressed)

How should we achieve migration? should it be automatic or manually

If tasks are not dealt with after timeframe, should we have a default option to handle

For migration, each task should have different options, i.e. migrate by 1 day, 1 week, specific timeframe

Option for bullet to show up both in previous location (crossed out) and the new location

Easy access to different days/sections from everywhere from migration menu/unfinished list

Really extra feature,
but maybe
inspirational quotes
on the index?

Building off Yu's idea, if we do a bookshelf, each "shelf" could represent the year, then each "journal" on the shelf represents the month of that year. If we open up the journal, then there could be the actual sections (i.e. pages 2-10 are June 2020, page 2-3 is the June monthly log, etc)

Calendar view
that automatically
updates when
events are entered

Indexing different parts of our bullet journal can be similar to "breadcrumb" navigation on websites i.e.
we can index in the following order: year,
month, week, day

We could create something similar to what google calendar does (like a straight calendar where you could add stuff to today/tomorrow/next week- would also help with migration)

Index

(lives at the front of the journal and provides pointers to the location of various collections)

How to achieve Index? How to represent index?

Rapid-Logging

(Quickly take information down by using a system of symbols, capture should be quick, contextual)

How much room
should we leave
for the users,
audio/no audio

Simple drop down menus
to choose what bullet point to use- limit to 340 characters like a tweet to get short thoughts- not allow rambling

Are the rapid logs
going to follow a certain format (like
all events are at the top of each log, then
the tasks, etc)

To have
section for each type
of bullets

Shortcuts i.e.
using "--" to nest
points, jumping to different sections
of the bujo

Collections

(grouping of pages in a bullet journal is a collection)

How do we wanna
represent our collections

How creative do we want the collections
to be (Books you've
read that month,
music you listened
to, etc)?

something creative,
for instance,
progress of the
current biggest task
you are working on?

what categories
would we want to split our collections into

We could have like a
"How was your day
overall 1-10" and
group "Bad Days"
"Good days" ect

If we want to focus on reflection, we could do something like gratitude log, mood tracker (each day in a month you color in how you're feeling)

Should be customizable with options like
mood/water/misc.
tracking, events/to-
do, mood journaling

Logs

(Future log 6mons+, Monthly logs, Daily logs, Custom Logs)

Presets (mood based one, task based one, daily/monthly/6month, etc.)

Have pre-defined logs to provide inspiration about what can be logged (food log, travel log)

When creating new logs, we should have the ability to add it to a specific collection

Have an ideas section where we provide suggestions on non pre-defined things users can log

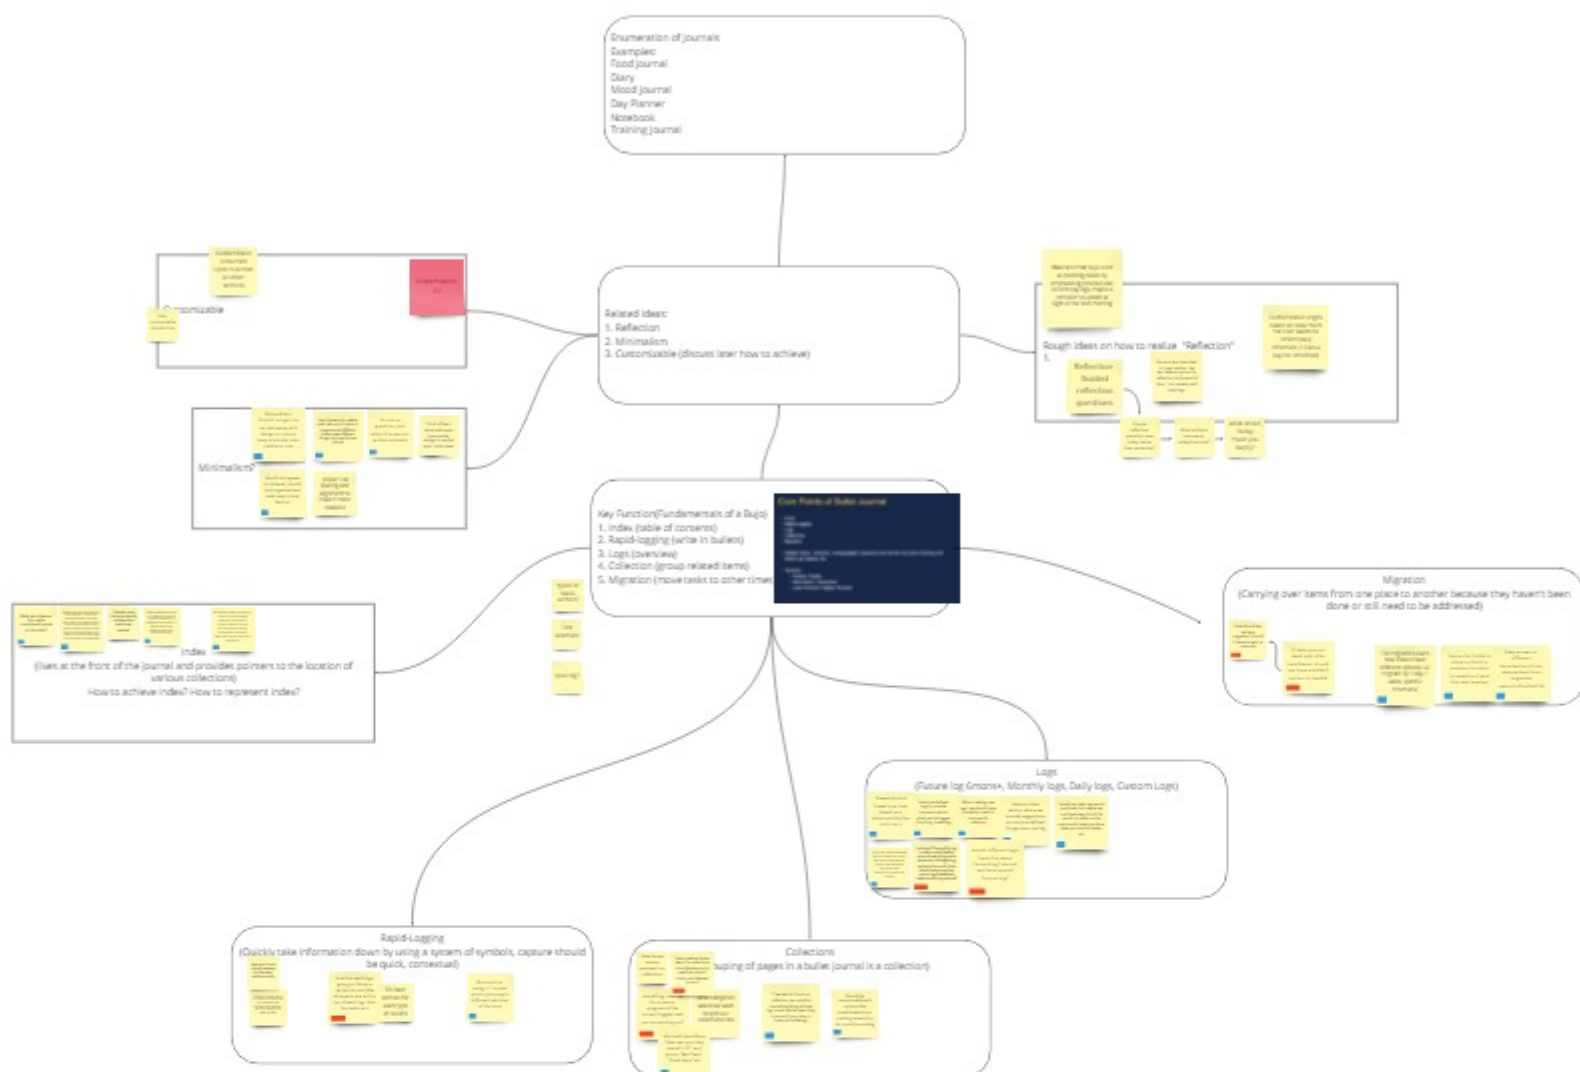

I would say daily logs would work best- but maybe we could ask every 1st of the month to reflect on the past month- what you done what you could do better ect

I think we should have daily logs (to create tasks, notes, etc) and monthly logs (to see at a high-level what your important events/tasks are for the month) not sure if the monthly log is really a useful feature since not everything starts and end on the beginning and end of a month. How about having long time custom logs instead and make monthly log optional?

would different logs have the same formatting? should we have special formatting?

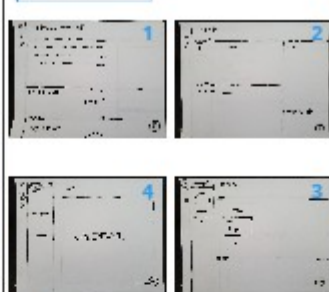

Brainstorming

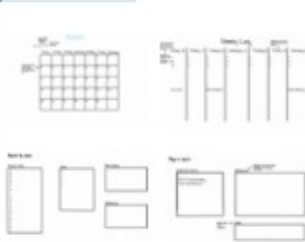

Yuri's fat-marker

Will's fat-marker

Rachel's fat-marker

Thanh Tong

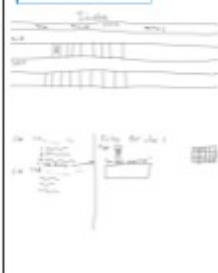

Noah Teshima

Zhiyuan's fat-marker

Brett's fat-marker

Katherine's

Alvin's

Final Interface

